During the war in 1944, three Italian prisoners of war arrive in an isolated community in the Black Isle to help with the farming. Ignored by the locals, worried about families at home, and miserable in the Scottish climate, they are finally befriended by a cowman's wife. The film explores what happens to a community when people of a different culture are forced to live and work among them. Michael Radford's 1996 Oscar nomination for Best Director and Best Screenplay for Il Postino later established him as one of the most important British film directors of his generation.
